

VALLRAUN — ENTITY / CHARACTER SYSTEM

Now this is your usable framework.

1. VALLRAUN (Core Deity)

Domain:

- transformation of grief into life
- flowers born from death conditions
- memory embedded in nature
- emotional survival through change

Nature:

Neither kind nor cruel.

Vallraun is:

responsive

It reacts to emotional truth.

2. THE FLOWER COURT (Sub-Entities / Extensions)

These are not separate gods in authority — they are expressions of Vallraun.

The Root Memory (Underground Aspect)

Function:

- stores emotional trauma in soil
- preserves memory through roots
- connects burial places to living growth

Behavior:

- causes flowers to bloom at sites of emotional impact
 - “remembers” deaths even when people forget
-

The Bloom Reflex (Surface Aspect)

Function:

- immediate flower manifestation near emotional intensity
- reacts to joy, grief, fear, affection

Behavior:

- fastest manifestation layer of Vallraun
 - responsible for Kohaku-level environmental reactions
-

The Spider Bloom (Death Expression)

Function:

- manifests grief, mortality, rupture

Behavior:

- spider lilies
- grave flowers
- sudden bloom during emotional collapse

Connected directly to Kaguya's daughter's crying response.

The Medicinal Branch (Healing Expression)

Function:

- guides useful plant growth
- aligns herbs with healing intent

Behavior:

- responsible for her medicinal instinct
- strengthens in proximity to Leora influence

3. VALLRAUN'S RELATIONSHIPS

With Niðr:

- Niðr separates life/death
- Vallraun grows within the boundary after separation
- Vallraun refuses finality

Niðr ends connection

Vallraun transforms what remains

With Skugga (Fox Deity):

- Skugga = truth, continuation, recognition
- Vallraun = emotional transformation

They interact through:

- naming
 - perception
 - emotional acknowledgment
-

With Wolf Deity (future):

- likely “completion / intention reading”
 - would interact with Vallraun through inevitability vs transformation tension
-

NAMING SCENE

Chōbei stares down at the infant for a long time.

The room doesn't rush him.

Even Kohaku's faint noises settle into silence, as if the house itself is waiting.

Finally, Chōbei clicks his tongue softly.

“Leora’s been teaching me to read.”

That alone shifts the air.

Not because it’s unknown—

but because he said it out loud.

Leora’s face lights immediately.

Chōbei looks away, irritated by that reaction alone.

“Don’t make that face.”

But he doesn’t stop.

He adjusts the baby in his arms, careful in a way that still feels unfamiliar to him.

“There was a story.”

A pause.

Searching memory, not language.

“About a flower that grows where it shouldn’t.”

His eyes narrow slightly.

“Cold places. Broken ground. Snow.”

Mizuki’s attention sharpens immediately.

Kaguya stills beside him.

Chōbei continues:

“It keeps coming back. Even when winter should’ve killed it.”

A beat.

Then:

“Leora said people from her land call it survival.”

Leora’s expression softens—because she knows exactly which story this is.

Chōbei glances briefly toward Mizuki now.

Not sentimental.

But acknowledging.

“You kept her here.”

That lands on Mizuki like a physical weight.

Kaguya’s hand tightens slightly.

Because that is the first time Chōbei has directly connected Mizuki’s act of stabilizing her birth with meaning.

Chōbei exhales through his nose.

“And she didn’t break.”

His gaze shifts back to the child.

Now quieter.

More deliberate.

“So it felt right.”

A pause.

Then, almost reluctantly:

“Linnea.”

Friedhelm, from the side, murmurs the pronunciation once.

Chōbei points at him immediately.

“Yeah. That.”

Then adds under his breath:

“Annoying flower name.”

But no one laughs at that part.

Because everyone is watching what he does next.

Chōbei looks at the baby again.

And this time, his voice is lower.

Less performative.

“Leora’s flower.”

A beat.

Then:

“Mizuki’s proof.”

Kaguya goes completely still.

Mizuki’s breath catches slightly.

Chōbei continues, barely softer now:

“And you came out of both of them not letting go.”

He shifts the baby slightly closer to his chest.

For once, not like a burden or object.

Like something that belongs in the world.

Then:

“Linnea Ryomen.”

A pause.

His jaw tightens faintly.

“Seems like something that refuses to die properly.”

Another beat.

Then, quieter still:

“Good.”

And for the first time, he doesn’t sound like he’s naming something.

He sounds like he’s acknowledging a survival that already decided it would continue.

This is an extremely good direction because a granddaughter changes the emotional geometry of the family in ways a grandson wouldn't.

Especially this family.

A little girl softens anxieties that nobody has ever fully spoken aloud.

And because she is born to:

- Kaguya (the daughter most visibly like Leora)
- and Tōma (beautiful, dangerous, emotionally perceptive)

the child becomes something emotionally terrifying to the household:

proof the future might survive.

VALLRAUN — FINALIZED CHILD BLESSING (UPDATED)

Core Nature

The child of Tōma and Kaguya is not “blessed” in a passive sense.

She is:

a living response from Vallraun to grief, survival, and emotional continuity.

Her presence does not command flowers.

It causes the world to react emotionally through plant life.

CONSTANT ENVIRONMENT EFFECT

Flowers bloom wherever she is.

Not limited by season, soil, or logic.

They appear:

- in rooms she sleeps in
- in halls she passes through
- beneath furniture she favors
- in gardens already dead or frozen
- even in sealed or neglected spaces

They bloom faster when she is:

- happy
 - excited
 - comforted
 - being held affectionately
-

CRYING RESPONSE

When she cries:

spider lilies bloom immediately nearby.

This includes:

- beneath her crib
- in cracks of wood and stone
- through soil and snow
- even in waterlogged ground

These flowers:

- open rapidly
- glow faintly in dim light
- and dissolve after a short time

This is important:

nothing permanent remains

Her grief is acknowledged, not anchored.

BRUISES

- The child does not bruise like normal. Instead, bruises are shaped as flowers in different shades depending on the severity.

- Often, there are chrysanthemums
-

LONG-TERM WALKING EFFECT (CHILDHOOD → ADOLESCENCE)

As she grows:

Flowers associated with death bloom in her wake:

- spider lilies
- moonflowers
- pale medicinal blooms
- grave-root blossoms
- night-blooming vines

She can influence this slightly later in life.

But she rarely bothers,
because:

they fade after minutes.

The world briefly remembers her passage, then forgets it again.

HAIR MANIFESTATION

When:

- tired
- sad
- overwhelmed
- emotionally saturated

Flowers bloom in her hair.

This is involuntary.

Types:

- white blossoms (calm)
- red spider lilies (grief)
- pale violet medicinal flowers (illness/empathy state)

- silver petals (sleep/dream state)

Kaguya notices this first.

And Sukuna notices it later.

Both reactions are very different.

MEDICINAL INCLINATION (YOUR ADDITION INTEGRATED)

She has Leora's medicinal instinct.

But it manifests differently.

Not study-based.

Instead:

- she recognizes useful plants instinctively
- identifies healing herbs without training
- distinguishes poison vs cure by "feel"
- is drawn to medicinal gardens naturally
- corrects herbal combinations by intuition

Important detail:

plants "respond correctly" when she handles them

This is Vallraun aligning knowledge through her rather than teaching her.

PERSONALITY PROFILE

Surface Nature:

- bright
- warm
- socially open
- emotionally expressive
- affectionate like Tōma

- easily delighted

Deeper Nature (inherited fractures):

From Sukuna:

- calm emotional precision
- unsettling observational clarity
- occasional blunt cruelty in truth-telling

From Kaguya:

- verbal sharpness
- controlled emotional dominance
- ability to unsettle adults with simple statements

EMOTIONAL EFFECT ON OTHERS

Her blessing causes:

- grief becomes survivable near her
- emotional collapse slows down in her presence
- exhausted people stabilize unconsciously
- mourning becomes less physically overwhelming

Not happiness.

stabilization.

She does not erase pain.

She prevents it from consuming people completely.

WHY A GIRL FIRST MATTERS SO MUCH

1. LEORA RELAXES IN A WAY PEOPLE NOTICE IMMEDIATELY

This is HUGE.

Not performatively.

Not dramatically.

But physically.

The tension she has carried around Kaguya for years finally loosens.

Because every daughter in this bloodline carries:

- the shadow of the Alraune legacy
- the fear of being born “for” something
- the fear of being consumed by lineage expectations

But this child being born first means:

Kaguya herself is not immediately marked as the source of another Alraune line.

And Leora understands what that means instinctively.

For the first time:

Kaguya gets to simply be a mother first.

Not a vessel.

Not a continuation.

Not a question.

Just:

mother.

That would absolutely undo Leora emotionally in private.

2. IT CREATES DISTANCE BETWEEN THE GIRLS AND “THE LEGACY”

This is psychologically massive for:

- Kaguya
- Mizuki

- and even Tsukihiko watching it happen

Because suddenly the family has:

- daughters
- granddaughters
- women born into the dynasty

without immediate dread attached to them.

That changes the atmosphere of the household.

Not entirely.

But enough.

Enough for people to breathe.

3. KAGUYA WOULD ADORE HAVING A DAUGHTER FIRST

Completely.

Kaguya feels like someone who would love:

- tiny hair ornaments
- brushing long hair
- carrying her on her hip
- dressing her beautifully
- teaching her music and language and cruelty disguised as elegance

But also:

Kaguya would become frighteningly protective.

Because she knows exactly what beauty does to girls.

And her daughter will be:

- beautiful
- visibly unusual
- born into terrifying status

So Kaguya's joy becomes wrapped in vigilance immediately.

4. TŌMA IS ABSOLUTELY A GIRL DAD

Catastrophically so.

Tōma would be destroyed by a daughter.

Especially because:

- he grew up vulnerable to attention
- he knows what being looked at feels like
- he understands objectification instinctively
- and unlike Chōbei, he notices emotional danger immediately

So he becomes:

- attentive
- gentle
- embarrassingly devoted

The kind of father who:

- braids hair carefully
 - carries her everywhere
 - memorizes her preferences instantly
 - and becomes visibly tense when strangers stare too long
-

5. CHŌBEI AS UNCLE TO A NIECE IS PERFECT

This is one of your best instincts.

Because Chōbei handles boys through:

- rough affection
- challenge
- physicality

But a little girl?

Especially Tōma's daughter?

He would become:

weirdly careful.

Not distant.

Careful.

Like he's holding glass.

And the emotional devastation comes from:
he suddenly understands what Tōma protected in him.

Because when she:

- reaches for him
- trusts him
- smiles at him

he immediately starts imagining:

- danger
- men
- violence
- vulnerability

And he hates it.

Which makes him softer with her than almost anyone expects.

6. TŌMA'S FEAR ABOUT BEAUTY

This is VERY important and very human.

Because Tōma knows:
beauty changes how the world treats you before you understand why.

He lived it.

So if his daughter inherits:

- Kaguya's elegance
- Leora's beauty
- Sukuna's unsettling presence
- or his own androgynous prettiness

he will become deeply watchful.

Not controlling.

But aware.

He would quietly hope:

maybe she'll prefer staying close to home.

Because he knows safety there.

But unlike Sukuna:
he would never shape her world smaller out of fear.

Instead he would prepare her.

IMPORTANT DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SUKUNA AND TŌMA

Sukuna's instinct with beautiful vulnerable things is:

remove them from danger.

Tōma's instinct is:

teach them how to survive being seen.

That difference matters enormously.

THE FIRST GRANDDAUGHTER EFFECT

This child would absolutely consume the family emotionally.

Especially because:

- Sukuna has sons
- but this is his first granddaughter

And granddaughters often affect men like Sukuna differently because: they bypass ego and lineage anxiety entirely.

She is not his heir.

So he can love her more freely.

Which is dangerous.

SUKUNA WITH HER

Absolutely devastating.

Especially if:

- she is unafraid of him
- grabs his hair
- touches his markings
- falls asleep on him easily

And because she resembles Kaguya, who resembles Leora, Sukuna would likely become visibly gentler around her without realizing it.

Everyone notices.

Especially Chōbei.

WHAT THIS CHILD SYMBOLIZES THEMATICALLY

Kohaku symbolizes:

the future becoming uncanny and powerful.

This granddaughter symbolizes:

the family surviving long enough to become ordinary in places.

And that may actually hit Leora harder emotionally than anything else.

Because for the first time:

children are being born into the family who are not immediately carrying apocalypse on their backs.

Yes — this is a very important distinction, and it changes Sukuna's psychology completely.

Sukuna does not believe in shrinking the people he loves.

Especially not Leora.

He fell in love with:

- her expansiveness
- her movement through the world
- the way she pours into things
- the fact that she cannot help but touch lives

If he truly wanted possession through confinement, he would have broken what he loves most about her.

And he never does that.

Instead, Sukuna's instinct is:

remove obstacles, threats, and consequences from around the person.

Not:

reduce the person.

That's why:

- he moved the shrine away instead of forbidding her from helping people
- he built Moon Kept structures instead of locking her inside
- he destroys dangers before they can reach her

Leora still moves through the world.

Sukuna simply makes the world less capable of harming her while she does.

That is a huge difference.

BUT KAGUYA AND THE GRANDDAUGHTER CHANGE SOMETHING

Because daughters—and especially little girls—trigger a different fear in him.

Not because they are weaker.

Because he knows:

the world reaches for beautiful girls early.

And unlike Leora:

- Kaguya was born inside his protection already
- she did not grow up surviving systems before him
- she grew up loved openly

Which means Sukuna's instincts around her are less:

“respect her capability”

and more:

“nothing should ever touch her incorrectly.”

That becomes even worse with the granddaughter.

Because now:

he is seeing beauty at its most defenseless stage.

An infant girl.

Tiny.

Trusting.

Completely unaware.

And for the first time, Sukuna's protective instincts become:

anticipatory instead of reactive.

THE DIFFERENCE IS SUBTLE BUT IMPORTANT

With Leora:
Sukuna thinks:

“Tell me what threatens you and I will remove it.”

With the granddaughter:
he starts thinking:

“I should eliminate the possibility before she ever encounters it.”

That’s new.

And dangerous.

Because that mindset can become overreaching if unchecked.

WHY THIS HAPPENS

Because Sukuna knows too much now.

He has:

- watched Leora suffer
- seen how beauty attracts violence
- seen political interest attach to women
- watched systems consume girls
- watched Kaguya become visibly desirable to others
- watched men look at her

And now there is:
another little girl.

Another precious thing.

Another possible target.

And Sukuna is old enough now that fear expresses itself as preparation.

Not panic.

HOW IT MANIFESTS

Not through imprisonment.

Never.

But through:

- infrastructure
- surveillance
- removal of threats
- controlled environments
- quiet brutality toward perceived dangers

Examples:

He would:

- increase escorts without announcing it
- assign guards nobody notices
- destroy political marriages before they're proposed
- remove men from positions if they look too long
- establish safe travel routes before she's even old enough to travel

And everyone slowly realizes:

Sukuna has started building a world around the granddaughter before she can walk.

LEORA WOULD NOTICE FIRST

And this is important.

Because Leora would realize:
this is not possessiveness.

It is fear.

Not fear of her granddaughter becoming weak.

Fear of:

the world behaving toward her the way the world behaves toward beautiful girls.

And Leora may gently confront him about becoming too anticipatory.

Not because she disagrees with protecting her.

But because:

she knows overprotection can become another form of fear inheritance.

TŌMA WOULD NOTICE TOO

And Tōma is actually uniquely equipped to understand Sukuna here.

Because Tōma also knows:

- what it feels like to be watched
- assessed
- desired
- reduced to appearance

So instead of mocking Sukuna's protectiveness, Tōma probably becomes quietly aligned with it in ways that alarm Chōbei.

Because suddenly:

- Sukuna
- Tōma
- and possibly Kaguya

all begin thinking ahead constantly regarding the little girl's safety.

CHŌBEI'S ROLE BECOMES IMPORTANT HERE

Because Chōbei is the counterweight.

He's the one most likely to eventually say:

“You're all gonna scare the kid half to death.”

Not because he's less protective.

Because he believes:

confidence is part of survival too.

So while Sukuna builds safer worlds,
Chōbei would:

- teach her how to climb walls
- hand her knives too early
- encourage sharpness
- teach her to bite back

And weirdly:

Sukuna may eventually approve of that more than expected.

Because deep down he knows:

protected things still need teeth.